The Charles Higdon House is late-nineteenth century rural vernacular dwelling with Italianate style influence. It is representative of an architectural type which was once common in Montgomery County but which has become increasingly rare as farmland is acquired for residential development.

The frame residence was built sometime between 1866 and 1878 by Charles L. Higdon, a carpenter. Higdon lived here with his wife, Susanna, until 1878 when they sold the house to Benjamin F. Coomes for $1,000. Based on assessment records, Coomes is probably the person responsible for constructing the rear addition about 1882. There are no historic outbuildings extant.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Charles Higdon House is a late-nineteenth century rural vernacular dwelling with Italianate style influences. It is representative of an architectural type which was once common in Montgomery County but which has become increasingly rare as farmland is acquired for residential development.

The Charles Higdon House is a two and one half story, three bay, I house which was built c.1866-78. The dwelling exhibits Italianate influences in its molded window surrounds, arched gable windows, and bracketed cornices and Federal influences in its general form. Located on a hill, the house faces southwest toward Darnestown Road (Route 28), east of its intersection with Darnestown-Germantown Road (Route 118). The setting of the house has changed dramatically in recent years when the roadbed for Route 28 was widened and leveled so that the house is now set on a plane approximately ten feet above the road.¹

Although the Higdon House is at the intersection of two busy roads, to the north and east there are still views of open fields and woods.

The main, side gable block is covered with vinyl siding, yet it retains its original patterned sheetmetal roof. An interior ridge chimney is located between second and third bays. The denticulated molded cornice, which returns at gable ends, is punctuated by small, scrolled end brackets.

The entire front (south) facade is obscured by a dense screen of conifers. The one story, full width porch is now enclosed with plywood which contains in its center bay a large, three-part window a 16-light center section which is flanked by four over four sash windows on each side. The porch has retained its bracketed cornice.

At the west gable end of the main block, windows on the first and second levels have molded Italianate style window surrounds. On the first level, windows are four over four sash, and two over two sash at the second level. In the gable is a small round-headed casement window with four lights. The east gable end has only a small round-headed window which is partially boarded and contains replacement sash.

The two story, two bay, rear wing, built c1882, is also vinyl-sided and has a patterned metal roof and a chimney located on the roof ridge which is perpendicular to the main block roof. A one-story, shed-roof addition on the east elevation which fills in the ell at that corner was probably originally a porch which has been enclosed. Entrance is from a recessed entranceway with two paneled doors in the south-most bay of the addition.

Behind the rear wing is a one and a half story, concrete block garage with roof ridge parallel to the main block. Two automobile bay openings are found on the east side. The garage, which contains vinyl siding at the gable ends, is attached to the rear wing by a one story hyphen enclosed with clapboard siding and French doors. The garage, hyphen and shed-roof addition have composition roofing.

To the rear (north) of the house are several non-contributing sheds.

Summary:

The Charles Higdon House contains some fine architectural details for so modest a house. Unfortunately, the resource's integrity has been greatly compromised with significant rear additions, vinyl siding, enclosed front porch, dense vegetation, and altered topography.

The Charles Higdon House was built sometime between 1866 and 1878 by Charles L. Higdon, a carpenter. Higdon purchased the property in 1866 from John and Lucinda Lewis for $100. Charles lived here with his wife, Susanna, until 1878 when he sold the house to Benjamin F. Coomes for $1,000.²

Based on assessment records, Coomes is probably the one responsible for constructing the rear addition about 1882. He and his wife, Alice, were forced to sell the property in 1894 after defaulting on their mortgage. At that time, the 3 3/4 acre parcel was described as being improved by a six room frame dwelling, six horse stable, carriage house and other outbuildings. None of those original outbuildings now remain.³

Since its sale in 1894, the property has passed through a succession of owners. The Diaz family has owned this resource since 1966.⁴

The Charles Higdon house is a simple but attractive circa. 1870 vernacular frame dwelling. Despite the enclosure of the front porch and the application of aluminum siding (which does not cover the window details) the house remains to a large degree, late nineteenth century in appearance.

The house was built sometime between 1866 and 1878 by Charles L. Higdon on 3 3/4 acres which he purchased in 1866 from John and Lucinda Lewis for $100.¹ Charles, a carpenter, lived here with his wife, Susanna, until 1878 when he sold the house to Benjamin F. Coomes for $1,000.² It was probably Coomes who had the rear wing added about 1882.³ The property was sold in 1894 after Benjamin and his wife, Alice defaulted on their mortgage. The property was at that time described as 3 3/4 acres improved by a six room frame dwelling, stable for six horses, carriage house and other outbuildings.⁴ The house has passed through a succession of owners since its sale in 1894. It is now the property of the Diaz family who purchased it in 1966.⁵
